ARGONAUTA RESEARCH DIRECTORY

INTRODUCTION

This special supplement to the October 1993 issue of ARGONAUTA contains the third issue of the new edition of the CNRS Research directory. This time the directory contains listings for 202 individuals, roughly two-thirds of the Society's members. We would like to thank all the members who took the time to complete the forms and to provide information. We hope that readers will find the guide useful in pursuing their individual interests in maritime history and in making helpful contacts with other members of CNRS. These are the purposes for which the directory was intended.

The format of the 1993 directory has been changed only slightly from the October 1990 issue. Indeed, there are only two significant alterations. The first has been to include for the first time E-Mail addresses for those members who use this system. The second difference concerns the way in which we have treated those members who have not revised their information. Contrary to our practice in previous directories, we gave Society members the choice of either providing new information or having us reprint their most recent listing. In those cases where members have not replied, we have thus reprinted their 1990 entries. In such cases we also print in parentheses after their name the date of the last update. But since members were asked to provide information only if they wished their last entry amended, we warn readers against drawing broad conclusions for those members who did not provide new listings.

The directory is, we hope, easy enough to understand. For each member who responded to our requests for information we list what has been provided. The address, whether business or office, is the one which the member has suggested. Home addresses are denoted by the letter "H;" places of employment are signified by the letter "O." Similarly, phone, FAX and E-mail numbers, where provided, are differentiated by the same symbols. The descriptions of research interests and the publications included are those selected by individual respondents.

A brief word is perhaps also in order about the indices. We asked each member to select up to three broad areas that describe their areas of research interest or special expertise. We also invited them to choose a particular chronological period and to pick up to three geographic areas to identify their special interests. While it will be obvious that these restrictions forced some members to make difficult choices, we still hope that you will find these useful. In particular, we hope that the indices will suggest to readers with particular interests the names of others with similar inclinations. You will find the indices at the end of the research directory.

We hope that this directory meets your needs. But since the Executive has directed us to compile and publish a revised directory every three years, we are already giving some thought to the October 1996 edition. We would be grateful if members with suggestions for improvements would share their ideas with us. In the interim, it is our intention to publish updates of listings, corrections (where necessary), and details on new members as space permits in regular issues of ARGONAUTA.
